

Environmental & Climate Preparedness Statement

TriMark USA and its affiliates (collectively, "TriMark") are committed to responsible operations and to supporting long-term sustainability across the foodservice industry. As a national distributor with facilities across the United States, we recognize the importance of understanding how environmental factors may influence our operations, our customers, and the communities we serve.

In 2025, TriMark completed a company-wide climate risk assessment to evaluate potential physical and transition-related climate impacts, in partnership with industry experts. This assessment process will continue into 2026 as we work to regularly reassess our exposure and preparedness. Based on our current operations and risk profile, climate-related risks do not currently present a material risk to TriMark's business. This reflects our non-manufacturing footprint, our leased facility model, and the broad geographic distribution of our operations."

TriMark continues to monitor evolving federal and state climate disclosure developments, including ongoing rulemaking and litigation, to ensure the company remains prepared should requirements evolve. Current state data does not identify any TriMark entity as subject to mandatory climate reporting requirements, and several components of the relevant laws remain under legal challenge. Given the regulatory uncertainty, TriMark is maintaining internal readiness.

We periodically evaluate potential environmental and operational risks to support long-term business continuity and resilience. TriMark also continues to identify practical opportunities to improve efficiency, reduce resource use, and support customer sustainability goals where such improvements align with operational realities and customer needs.

As expectations and requirements evolve, TriMark remains committed to transparent communication about our approach to environmental responsibility and the steps we take to support sustainable, resilient operations for the customers and communities we serve.
